WATER IS WAR

You are going to sit in a large room with a group of about one hundred soldiers. They are taking a course on Survival. The instructor is Sergeant Bill Thompson. He is going to tell them about the importance of water. Water? As far as you are concerned when you are thirsty you simply turn on the faucet. Out goes a steady stream of pure water. Simple, isn't it? But what do you do when you are in strange enemy territory and you want to get back to your lines? A distance perhaps of three hundred miles and you haven't any water to drink. So listen to what Sergeant Bill Thompson is telling the men:

"The amount of water a man needs can vary from one pint to five gallons per day. Depending on climate, exertion, health, body weight, and the duration of the period of reduced supply. An average man, engaging in little exercise, can exist quite well except in hot climates on two quarts a day. A ration of a pint a day can be maintained only a few days without definite body dehydration and loss of efficiency.

Fortunately, the finding of fresh water is a problem only at sea and in desert areas. Finding pure water or purifying what you do find, however, is a problem almost everywhere. When water is scarce and you have limited means of purifying it, you will have to conserve supplies and control your requirements.

The first rule is to ration the water supply. Keep the ration at not less than one quart per day. Of course, if you come to more water than you can carry, drink plenty. In any event, don't drink your daily rations all at once. Drink four to eight equal quantities a day in small sips. Do not drink cold water or excessive amounts when you are very hot from sun or exercise. Warm the cold water, snow or ice in your mouth before swallowing it.

The second rule is to eat less. If you do not have any water, don't eat, for eating will hasten dehydration of your body. Do not eat a normal amount of food unless your ration is two or three quarts daily. Especially avoid dry foods, salty foods and large amounts of protein and fats, fish or eggs.

The third rule is to control perspiration. In normal life we lose a quart or more of water each day in the form of sweat. At times, such as in dry desert climates, we do not see the moisture of the sweat because it evaporates as fast as it is excreted from the pores. To control the amount of sweating, avoid sunlight and exertion. This may be hard when you are trying to travel, evade and survive. The solution is: Take it easy, even in enemy territory.

In most areas you run less risks of detection by the enemy if you move slowly, looking each area over before entering it. In all cases, you can avoid excessive heat and sweating by traveling at night and spending the day sleeping or resting in the shade. You can find more food and water in most regions by not moving too fast. Take time to look for streams, springs, game, trails, fruits and so on. You can spend twenty days or more traveling one hundred miles with much less bodily damage from lack of food, lack of water and exertion than if you try to cover that distance in four days. Along the seashore you can cut down perspiration by keeping your clothing wet or damp with sea water.

There are many signs which should tell you that there is a water supply nearby. Mammals and domestic animals are usually a sign that a water supply is nearby. Follow the trails of animals, choosing the direction in which trails become more heavily traveled and toward which various trails converge. Trees grow larger where there is abundant ground water. Grass is taller and greener. Certain plants grow only where the ground water is near the surface: salt grass, rushes, sedges, cattails, greasewood, willow, elderberry and most desert palms.

In the evening, birds usually fly toward their water source in dry regions. If you encounter a larger number of animals in a certain small region, there is probably a source of water there. Lastly, of course, is human civilization. Men live near sources of water. That doesn't mean, however, that you drink water furnished you by friendly natives with safety. Many areas are ridden with dysentery, cholera, typhoid, flukes, worms and leeches which natives acquire from their water supply. Purify such water by boiling or chemical treatment.

In many parts of the world you can find water by just looking around you. Sometimes you can be sure it is pure. Usually you must purify this water by boiling it for at least one minute by using water purification tablets, or by adding eight drops of a 2½ per cent iodine solution per quart of water, and waiting ten minutes before using.

Rain is pure water. If you don't like its taste, the reason is that, being pure, it lacks the mineral salts of the water you're accustomed to drinking. These salts give water its taste. Dew is a good source of water. It is pure except for possible dirt from the surface of the leaves or other objects upon which it has collected. You will find more water on a clear night than on an overcast night. Collect it just before dawn by holding a container under the leaves of plants and trees and shaking off the dew. An alternate is to mop up the dew with a clean cloth or a handful of soft grass. Then wring out the dew into your mouth or into a container.

Streams and rivers can usually be presumed to be unsafe sources of water requiring purification before drinking. The sole exception is the clear snow-fed mountain streams above the highest human habitation. The water from a running stream near a native village may be dangerous. While the muddy water from a slow moving river in an inhabited region may be safe. Water from streams and rivers is especially dangerous in the tropics. The only safe procedure is to purify all water obtained from  and rivers.

Lakes and ponds usually contain less mud and sediment than streams. But they are equally questionable water sources. Water from a large lake, far from human habitation is usually safe. Few such lakes exist, for it is common to find a village somewhere along the shores of any large lake except in the Arctic.

A safe rule is to plan to purify all ground water, whether from lakes, puddles, brooks, swamps or rivers. Water in swamps, bogs and pockets in the forest floor may be dark in color and acid tasting from decaying vegetation. But it is not harmful, although it may require purification if found near human dwellings.

Springs and seepage, especially issuing from a rock, are usually safe. Look for springs near the bases of hills. They will often be marked by a cluster of bushes, willows, tall grass or other plants. Or by a small brook which ends at that point. Springs are usually near the bottom of a long slope or hill, especially along the edge of a lake or stream. Many lakes are spring fed. Springs can also be found at the head of a beach.

The safest springs are those which issue from rock. If spring water is warm it may be largely surface water and unsafe until it is purified. If cold, the water is from deep within the ground and more reliable. Springs and seepages are likely in many areas, even in rock and lava cliffs. Look for them in caverns along the walls of valleys or gorges, at the base of cracks in the rocks, along the edge of a valley floor, at the bases of benches or terraces of land above river valleys, or at wet places in a clay buff. You can find water in the hollows between sand dunes by digging where the sand is moist. Dig if you find a damp spot even though no water is visible on the surface.

In general, you may find water in the sort of places where you'd expect to see a spring. Dig a hole or two to a depth of a few feet and wait for it to fill. If water trickles into the hole, wait until it settles out a bit before removing the accumulation. In order to know how to select a good location it is necessary to understand about the water table.

The water table is the level under the ground at which the rocks or soil are saturated with water. In a desert or arid area, this may be hundreds of feet deep. In other areas it may reach the surface in certain places. And you can see the relation of the water table to the surface. Along ocean beaches or on tropical atolls, there may be salt water at lower levels. Any digging in this case must not go to a depth below the level where the water is first encountered. Water lying below the water table, termed "ground water" is usually pure. Water found above the water table, called "surface" or runoff water, is likely to be contaminated.

Limestone is a good source of springs and seepage. It is relatively soft and water cuts channels and caverns through the rock. Look inside the caverns and cracks.

And now, gentlemen, I assume you are all thirsty. Nothing like a good drink of clear pure cold water — from the faucet. Next meeting I will tell you more about the problems of water in the desert and in the tropics."

How do YOU look walking on the beach with your girl or wife?

Tony Piscarello AFTER

Albert Dorne—probably the greatest money-maker in the history of commercial art. At the height of his career, he began a full-time search for people who like to draw.

He's Looking for People Who Like to Draw

TODAY HUNDREDS of men and women who never thought they could be artists are working happily at easels and drawing boards, making pictures and getting well paid for it. They all can thank Albert Dorne, a famous artist who devotes almost his full time to helping other people become artists.

Some of the People Dorne Has Helped

Herb Smith was a payroll clerk. Soon after he started studying with us, he landed an art job with a large printing firm. This was four years ago; today he's head artist for the same firm.

John Buskett is another. He was a pipefitter's helper in a big gas company. Today he still works for the same company, but as an artist in the advertising department, with a big increase in pay.

Harriet Kuzniowski was bored with an "ordinary" job before she heard of Albert Dorne. Today she does high-style fashion illustration in New York.

With the right training, Wanda Pickulski gave up her typing job to become fashion artist for a local department store.

John Whitaker of Memphis was an airline clerk two years ago. Recently he won a national cartooning contest and was signed to do a newspaper comic strip.

Long before Albert Dorne started looking for people who like to draw, they came to him for advice and help. Since he alone could help only a few of these people, he called together America's most successful artists—men like Norman Rockwell, Jon Whitcomb, Stevan Dohanos and Al Parker.

A Plan to Help Others

He said: "All over America, there are people who like to draw, who could be turned into good artists. Why can't we give these people the training they need—including all the trade secrets and know-how we've learned over the years? I'm suggesting a new kind of school—a home-study art school that would give talented people the best professional art training, no matter where they live."

The famous artists agreed. Taking time from their busy careers, they spent several years creating a remarkable series of art lessons covering every aspect of drawing and painting. They illustrated their lessons with over 5,000 "here's-how" illustrations. The lessons start from scratch and cover every skill a top artist needs. Finally, the famous artists developed a wonderful way to give each student personal correction and advice all through his training.

Albert Dorne is not surprised by the success of his students. "The art field is growing. We keep getting calls from all over the country, asking us for practical, well-trained students who can step into full-time or part-time art jobs."

Famous Artists Talent Test

To find others with art talent worth developing, the famous artists created a 12-page talent test. Thousands paid $1 for this test, but now the School offers it free and will grade it free. If you show talent on the test, you will be eligible for training by the School. No obligation. Simply mail coupon. It might be your first step to an exciting, well-paid career in art.

Famous Artists Schools Studio 7348, Westport, Conn.

I would like to find out whether I have art talent worth developing. Please send me, without obligation, your Famous Artists Talent Test.
